Overview

Developing the Young Workforce (DYW) is the Scottish Government's national strategy for strengthening industry links with education with the headline aim of reducing youth unemployment.

The younger team members of DYW Glasgow and DYW West have teamed up to tackle the objective of the Year of Young People 2018 - to provide a platform for young people to have their views heard and acted upon.

If you are 26 or under, through this platform you are invited to contribute to a bank of thoughts around education in Scotland - by completing the sentence 'Education should be...'

What Happens Next

In September, we will explore the most popular suggestions from the 'Education should be...' platform.

We will then organise focus groups with small groups of young people, asking them to investigate solutions and offer their thoughts on how the 'Education should be...' suggestions might be achieved.

Later in the year, our findings will be revealed at a grand event - allowing young people's thoughts on education to be heard by key influencers of education in Scotland.
