

Supporting the anxiety (intervention)

Supporting approach ‘ 5-point scale’	Making it successful	Resources
This is a very simple and flexible tool. It can be used to help children in becoming aware of their emotions and to control their emotional responses to everyday events. This is not a behaviour management tool. It is based on cognitive behaviour theory. It is not a behaviour management tool but rather to help the child/young person learn more about their emotions and develop independence in regulation. It is a visual strategy, originally designed for children with autism, but can be effective for children/young people with wellbeing needs due to a wide range of factors. It is suggested that the best way to introduce this approach is through “one to one” instruction. It can be developed by the teacher or as a collaboration between the teacher/parent and the individual. Using the scale, the child rates his emotions (e.g. worry, anxiety or anger) or a state, as numbers 1-5 or 1-3. They are then encouraged and supported to suggest alternative, positive solutions at each level of the scale.	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • It is important to ensure the child’s active participation in developing a scale • The scale should be adapted to the individual’s age and stage of development (cognitive, social and emotional), using the child’s own words at each level • It can be simplified to a 3-point scale for younger children or individuals that require this. • Introduction to the scale should take place during a neutral activity and when the child is calm • At each level, the child will identify what each rating may look like, feel like, and possible solutions/coping skills to try • It is helpful to Identify (when required): <ul style="list-style-type: none"> - Safe places. A prearranged space that your child is allowed to go to when they begin to feel anxious/frustrated - A list of people who know and understand the needs of the Child/young person and are aware of the scale and the strategies • Children should be encouraged to rate themselves several times a day (with adult support) • Practise using the scale in a calm environment and then by reinforcing each of the child’s attempts. Revise, if required. • Systematic and regular use is essential for successful implementation and effectiveness of this intervention. 	Falkirk Council Educational Psychology Service. Incredible 5 Point Scale tutorial part one tutorial part two  Blank scales, sample scales and a list of recommended books and resources are available here: https://www.5pointscale.com/scales.html Examples Buron, K. D (2015). The Incredible 5 point Scale Webinar (1 hour).