Staying Safe Using Social Media advice from PC McFarlane

With the ever increasing use of online devices, being online is an important part of our lives with many benefits including studying, working, social media and gaming. Many people will have several devices within their households allowing them access to these benefits. With these benefits however, come many risks which could include becoming the victim of online bullying, online fraud or other criminality.

Due to the increased online presence of young people, this has raised serious concerns about the safety of the internet and social media, highlighting the risks posed to those persons who are online, particularly young people. As parents and staff, we try to keep young people safe from risks or dangers in the 'real world', but it is now vitally important we show the same endeavour to keep our children safe in the 'online world' too.
