#KPSLovesReading

My daughter(7) finds reading hard work, which is difficult for a parent who was an avid reader from an early age. It would have been easy for Rosie to turn her back on literacy but through KPS Loves Reading, she has found a love of books, even though reading them is a struggle. She is keen to bring home books from the school library for us to share. KPS Loves Reading has fired Rosie's imagination and she is always making up stories and illustrations. KPS Loves Reading has given her a fun way into literacy and has focused on the enjoyment of reading and effort, rather than always getting it right. We have a long way to go with her reading but I think with such a positive start, Rosie will always have a love of the literary world and will be motivated to continue to learn the strategies that she needs to explore it. Thank you for making learning fun. Well done KPS! 😊👍📚

Libby Cowan, P2/1, had her passion for reading sparked in P1 with all the amazing events and activities which were taking place, and indeed continue to take place at KPS. Libby LOVED the Matilda performance and this resulted in Libby being eager to discover lots more about the world of Roald Dahl and his characters.

I have two girls who attend KPS and have fallen in love with reading.

Freya and Afton both now love different types of reading material, become more imaginative when storytelling and developed their language.

Freya loves a competition! When the reading challenge first launched she was constantly reading and read over 100 books. She said to me in the car coming home one dayMummy, Anna (her best friend) and I have made an appointment with Mrs McCredie as we have an idea to change the reading challenge. This includes a monthly class prize for selected pupils for good reading. I rolled my eyes and said to her "Freya I'm sure your idea is great, but the head teacher is not going to change the reading challenge"

I could not have been more wrong. Freya and Anna pitched their idea and this reading challenge still continues today.

My daughter and her friend have not only fallen in love with books but have been supported to develop their ideas to improve reading across the school.

My younger daughter who is six loves stories, but has struggled with her reading. The school have been very supportive. Her two teachers have made regular contact to update me and have given me tips on what I can do at home.

KPS does love reading

From a very proud and happy Mummy
