Task description

Globalisation has led to an increase in the amount of child soldiers. This is because weapons manufacturers are able to produce and supply weapons to governments and militia groups (who often fight against their governments) in war torn countries. These weapons are given to children who are usually kidnapped and trained to fight like soldiers.

At the same time, globalisation has also helped raise awareness around the world about the issue of children fighting in wars. This has helped to put pressure on countries to do something about it and led to support from the UN and charities being provided in many countries.
