

Writing a Recount

Remember a recount is when you write about something that has already happened. You are going to be writing a personal recount this week. As it has been very nice outside and we have had lots of sunny days in the past week, I would like you to write a recount about one of the sunny days. Think about a day where you went outside and had some fun and you will write about that day. Remember to write in the past tense and write lots of detail about what you could see, hear, smell and felt. Try to use some great describing words and write in a logical order from morning until night. Remember to take a new paragraph for a new part of the day or a new idea.

Your heading, learning intention and success criteria are below.

One Sunny Day

L.I. - I am learning to write a personal recount with lots of descriptions.

Success Criteria:

- I can write my story in a logical order in paragraphs.
- I can describe what I could see, hear and smell and how I felt.
- I can write in the past tense.
- I can remember my core targets.