

1966 World Cup.

1966 was an important year for England as they won the World Cup, beating West Germany 4-2 in the final.

Throughout history, England and Scotland have always had a big rivalry in sport. With that in mind, 1967 was maybe a more important year for Scotland as they beat the world champions, England, 3-2 in front of over 99,000 people at Wembley.

This week I have set some 1960s World Cup themed challenges for you.

1. Watch this clip all about the controversy that surrounded one of England's goals in the 1966 World Cup. What do you think, should the goal have been allowed? Write down your thoughts and share them with someone at home. Here is the link:

2. Come up with a unique celebration that you might do if you had just scored the winning goal at the 1966 world cup. You could choose to represent any country you like.
3. Research the famous commentary from the final of BBC commentator Kenneth Wolstenholme. What did he say in the final few seconds of the 1966 World Cup Final? What would you have said if you were commentating on the match?
