

MTV My Favourite No

The most important part of the formative assessment process is feedback! Young people need appropriate feedback from staff but also need to be able to self-assess honestly and give feedback on their own work to allow them to review and check practice papers at home.

In class, we had completed a timed practice RUAЕ exam paper. Before I issued the scores back, we took the time to review some of 'My Favourite No' answers. These answers were not wrong but did not pick up the available marks for a number of different reasons. In groups, the class looked at each 'No' answer and discussed why it had not achieved the appropriate number of marks and what feedback could be given to the individual to ensure they did pick up all available marks next time.

A really engaging – and dare I say fun – way to go over exam practice!
