

Research the Edwardian period for ideas of fashion and jobs people did. Create a 'character' for yourself and draw a picture of what he/she may have looked like. Add a short biography of who they may be, where they came from and why they had decided to travel on the Titanic.

Spelling

Have a look at days of the week, months of the year and seasons. Watch out for capital letters where needed and for pesky silent letters.

Try to learn them in French too.

Reading

Choose a book you like the look of at home, get a mug of hot chocolate, a blanket, a comfy space, some music if you like and lose yourself in the story.

Imagine you are the main character, do you agree with their actions, do you feel empathy for what they are facing, would you like to be them?

Now share your story with a loved one at home and enjoy being together.

We didn't finish our dioramas. why not recreate a first or third class suite/cabin on the Titanic from card/junk? Annotate them with a key explaining what features they would have had and how much each one cost the passengers.

These are suggested activities and ideas which your child can do to support their weekly learning focus. It is not mandatory to complete all activities.

Everyday try to use some alliteration or simile as you talk at home.

'Dad, can I have a cool cup of magnificent, marvelous milk, please?'

'You just stood up like a rocket at take off, bro'

Watch Newsround and create a PowerPoint or other image software to keep an image diary of what interests you during your time at home.

Write a diary entry of one of the survivors of the Titanic. You could include the story of your escape, the time in the lifeboat, the moment you are saved by the Carpathia or your arrival in New York. Remember to include emotive language and descriptive detail.
Set up a story-telling night at home and share your story with the family.

Read some recipe books and share some time with someone as you bake or make dinner together.
Search 10 minute dumpling online and you could even recreate the delicious time we had in class!
